"I needed something beautiful in my life, and Hemingway had me convinced there's nothing more beautiful than Spain." Driven by his favorite author's love of a country, Hyatt signs up to study abroad in Spain for a change of scenery. He doesn't go looking for anything in particular, but he knows he needs something. The trip comes at a time when he's lost, floating through life with little care for anything or anyone. Tom made the decision to go to Spain after experiencing one of the most horrifying times in his life. Feeling alone, he knew he had to make a change to save himself. Little did he know that before he left, he would meet a change in Becca. When the time comes for him to leave, Tom is torn. He knows he still needs the experience, but doesn't want to leave a new relationship with a promising future. In the next few months, they would immerse themselves in a culture that called to them. Experiencing new countries, new languages, and new ways of living, they would come back changed. Most importantly, they would come back as family.
