We have all seen the contest where a person is in a bank vault and has 360 seconds to grab as much money as possible.

If it were you, would you stop grabbing money after you had "just enough" in your hands? Would you stop grabbing money when there were only 60 seconds left? Would you ever be too tired to keep grabbing more money? Obviously not. Why? Because the reward of what that money can do for you overrides any of the reasons to stop.

A wrestling match is the same type of contest. You need to have the same kind of mindset. To a wrestler, points are money. In each match, you have 360 seconds to score as many points as possible. When the whistle blows, the allure of scoring points must override any and all obstacles. Have a safe lead? Need to score more points. Have short time? Need to score more points. Have a fear of losing? Need to score more points. Like with the money grab, the only time you stop scoring points is when there is no time left in the contest.
