This book examines the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh and the reasons which caused the war by presenting historical facts and using testimonies and secret documents. At the same time, we deal with the structure of the conflict, in order to examine whether and under which circumstances, the outstanding issue of Nagorno-Karabakh can be resolved on the basis of the right to self - determination through negotiations, but also taking into consideration the rules of the balance of power. Beyond the strategic anatomy of the conflict, it is of utmost importance to answer questions concerning the fundamental legal and political aspects of the war such as the illegal status of mercenaries and terrorists, and their role in a conflict. Mercenaries and terrorists, with their actions are constituent elements of the war and should be studied in depth, from legal, political and ethical point of view. War is a vibrant social, diplomatic, military and political phenomenon. Rage never serves for a wise advisor to the decision maker. Nevertheless, it is in fact an element inherent in the nature of human beings and along with fear and braveness, they constitute the main component characteristics of a soldier fighting in the vortex of a war for personal and national dignity and survival. War is a crime by nature and a civilized society cannot function by the rules of the jungle, albeit there are certain occasions where human beings cannot resist to their bestial instincts. In those cases, inhuman and other atrocious actions occur and if the punishment is not a result of a reliable legal system, then, it is doomed to rise from the rage of the victims or to be imposed by the military strength or by the combination of power, economic and other sanctions, as well as from smart decisions and actions. Most of the time, punishment is disguised with the ethical mantle of legitimacy, hence the concept of just war.
