Master of the Dungeon: A Heroes and Harpies Fantasy Cara Vance

The difference between reality and fantasy rests in a single roll of the dice

All that college student Trinity Sanders wanted was to stay at home - watching TV, eating ice cream, and bemoaning her cheating louse of a boyfriend. Instead, she let her roommate talk her into an evening of throwing dice with her gaming group.

Annoyed at the prospect of wasting a Friday night with a bunch of social rejects, Trinity decides to take out her frustrations on their game master Seth. He might be cuter than expected, but as far as she's concerned he's still a dork. Sadly for her, she's picked the wrong person to mess with. Seth is in control of a very special book, one that lets him bring his world to life - a world that he rules over as a god.

Now, Trinity finds herself trapped in the body of a scantily clad barbarian as Seth tests her with terrifying ordeals - ordeals that the warrior inside her finds oddly titillating as well. She must battle monsters, complete her quest, and satisfy all of her desires because the mythical creatures hunting her are not only real; they're interested in a lot more than just her blood.
