Commando #4921: A Soldier's Legacy Ferg Handley

Private Steve Kirby was very skilled and more than ready for the tough basic training that he and his fellow new recruits had to endure in the spring of 1944.

Eventually the instructors wanted to know why Steve seemed to have an advantage over everyone else. The dedicated conscript revealed that his father had been an infantry corporal in World War One and Kirby Senior had trained his son in military drills and techniques, should they ever be needed.

However, Steve soon discovered that his father's legacy was not always a welcome one and, of course, no amount of training could truly prepare anyone for combat...
