Taylor has what seems like the perfect life. A successful loving husband, two wonderful children, and a non-profit organization that is booming. Let's not forget a house that anyone would die for. Seems like life can't get any better until what's in the dark comes to light. She finds that her husband of nine years is having an affair. With her world completely crushed Taylor is forced to question her beliefs and everything that she thought their relationship had been.

Sean is the most sought after Architect in Atlanta. He prides himself on being a good man and loving father. After a mistake catches up to him and shatters the family he worked so hard to build he finds just how much he took it all for granted. Although Taylor is determined to walk away, he won't let her go without a fight. Can the love they once had and the life that they built be enough to bring these to back together? Or is an affair too much to reconcile and recover from? Can Taylor forgive and forget the hurt caused by the man she loved and trusted? Does Love truly heal all wounds?
