The more friends you have, the more you'll have the right people in your life to give you the support and connection you desire. Having more friends means you'll consistently connect with new people and also keep the good friends you already have. If your friendships don't seem to stick, you'll be making friends and losing them quickly. The key to having more friends is increasing the number of people you meet on a regular basis and holding on to the great pals you already have. This book contains one hundred suggestions on how to make new friends and also strengthen the friendships you already have. The tips are varied, with suggestions on how to meet new people interspersed with ideas for nurturing your new and existing friendships.
