Excerpt from Annual Proceedings and Bulletin, 1905

The American Rose Society, organized in 1899, for the purpose of increasing the popular interest in and cultural knowledge of the Queen of Flowers, issues this, its first complete annual report with the hope that it may help to inspire the ardor of the rose-lover, whether he be professional or amateur, and awaken throughout our land that zealous loyalty and active support without which no organization can ever expect to accomplish anything of value.

First in the heart of the people, from time immemorial, the rose is pre-eminently everybody's flower. Considering the affection with which it is regarded we might with reason expect to find it universally grown and that it is not made more prominent as a feature of American gardens has been frequently commented on. The reasons for its neglect are several, not the least of these being the unsatisfactory results from the cheap, high-budded, imported stock which has been dealt out by department stores and irresponsible agents and the enfeebled little scraps sent out as "plants" by the lower class of "mail order" concerns. The would-be rose-cultivator who starts with no better material than thus afforded (and there are many thousands such) will not long persist and, indeed, it is also true that, given the very best material, the price of success in rose culture is a constant attention and application such as but few are inclined to bestow. To quote Dean Hole: "In rose-growing as in everything else, earnestness and industry, born of love, must achieve success."

Yet a better knowledge of the facts on which success depends would undoubtedly inspire many to make the attempt and help them on to satisfactory results and the influence on a neighborhood of a good example is well known. To disseminate this popular knowledge is one of the chief functions of the American Rose Society. If it can demonstrate to the public that rose gardens, giving blossoms in abundance from June first to November first in the latitude of Boston, Buffalo and Chicago, and able to withstand the winter with a reasonable protection are easily possible, the demand for rose plants will quickly reach unheard-of proportions.
